SYNOPSIS

A 13th Century medieval poet, Glenn C. Clever, is caught up in an eternal battle between two immortals, Destiny and Fate. Clever is banished to Dark World where he discovers two ancient stone tablets that magically transform into stone bracelets and attach themselves to his wrist. Wanting the tablets back, Clever is now marked for death by an evil necromancer. Hunted, captured and nearly beaten to death, Clever's redemption poem unleashes the bracelets' mystical powers and transforms him into something that is even beyond immortality – a divine immortal. Clever returns to earth to face-off against a sinister power that threatens to destroy mankind.

Goal and benefit behind story?

This story is centered around religious thought during 1327 CE Medieval Europe that defines the individual soul as a "spark" of the divine at its most basic element. By renouncing all knowledge of self, one can retreat into that "spark" and reach God. Two bands of religious practice rose from this theory: heterodox, the belief in the unification of God and man on earth without the aid of priests as intermediaries, and orthodox, the belief in the possibility of joining the soul with God and the awareness of divine presence in everyday life.
